BRITAIN'S ON KILLER SMOG

ALERT

Government's shock Easter health warning

By Victoria Fletcher Health Editor

THE prolonged warm weather has led to an official smog warning being issued for the whole of England and Wales.

High levels of pollution threaten to blight the Easter weekend for millions and could hasten the death of those with lung conditions.

People with asthma and other breathing problems were last night advised to keep their medication close to hand as the dirty air triggers respiratory attacks. Many millions more could experience hay fever symptoms as the still, warm conditions also cause trees to release their pollen earlier than usual.

Experts say the warm weather, which is forecast to continue throughout the bank holiday with temperatures nudging 80F (27C) in some areas, will mean people are spending far longer than usual outdoors, increasing their exposure to the allergens and triggering runny noses, sore eyes and sneezing.

The environmental double whammy could mean that the four-day holiday becomes miserable for many who are forced to stay inside to avoid becoming
